i was raised in ...Redacted... and have many fond memories of playing on jessel green learning to ride my push bike, racing my go cart down the hill, making snowmen and riding my sledge, attending bon fires on November 5th. the only blight on jessel green has been on the laying of bitumen by the council which was never utilised and has since been grown over by the grass as the years pass by. many green areas have been developed around jessel green over the years and its time to stop any more development and leave jessel green for the local children and future generations. the east end of london has many more open spaces than forty years ago as local councils realised that the communities need communal area to socialise and play. the roads and pavements around jessel green are a disgrace chocked with parked cars and the pavements are dangerous to the elderly because of lack of maintenance and over use. i strongly object to any development if jessel green the local people need this open space
