im writing to you today about your plans to build on jessel green and various sites around debden. i live in Redacted and moved here over 5 years ago. we decided on debden as we wanted more of a green suburb to live in but within walking distance to a railway station. my wide and i job on and around jessel green on a regular basis and i have also just signed up to boot-camp which is also run on jessel green and being an asthmatic its nice to have an open fresh area to train on. not only that but i have also seen the air ambulance use jessel green on many occasion as its more than suitable to land on in emergencies. where do you expect people with families to go so their children can play about etc? have you the noise pollution as i know quite a few people in close proximity including myself that do shift work? have you thought about what DR surgery's, dentist, schools all these new residents will use? what about extra policing? i know there are other greens in the area but they are very hilly or privately owned so they are not suitable when we moved here there was an overwhelming sense of community and we always attend the fun days that are arranged on jessel green with our niece and nephew which they always enjoy. we find it hard to believe there are no other sites in the area that would be more suitable and less intrusive to residents ie. the badly utilised industrial brownfield land like the clinton cards site or areas of langston road if you where to build on jessel green we would seriously have to think about moving out of the area to am area where there is planning for new garden villages, if i wanted to live in a built up area i would have moved into london i hope you use your heart and not your pockets to come to the right decision for the residents
