Letter or Email Response:

re: local plan we moved from east london to debden over 16 years ago (my wife having lived in the area most of her life) one of the main reasons for moving and what attracted us the most about the area was the way it had been planned to incorporate a green environment with open spaces, play areas, verges of greens. all very different and pleasing from the urban sprawl of east london. we live in Redacted overlooking the beauty of jessel green with its stunning views from the top of the hill. people who visit from outside the area are amazed that areas like this still exist and for this very reason we are totally amazed and dismayed that the council can even consider building on land such as this, destroying what was obviously planned to enhance the area and thus the community as a whole. surely what was a good idea then remains even more so today. we appreciate the need for housing, but would suggest and consider that unused 'brown field' sites are obviously the preferable option rather than developing these beautiful open spaces of loughton and overall for the benefit of the people of loughton
