I live in ...Redacted... and have done for over 20 years and regarding the plans for Loughton, we moved here from east London to get away from a busy built up area for a better life with more open space to bring up our children. More fore we are strongly opposed to the plans for Jesse Green and other areas. We live literally a stones throw from the green and that's why we moved to our house, it allowed our children such freedom, riding bikes without fear of the road or cars, playing football, cricket, kite flying, taking dogs for walks, the swing park, and of course in the last years the community fun day which have been brilliant. In the winter when it snows, the hill is packed with people of all ages messing around on sledges, building giant snowballs. For the young and the old it will be a great, sad day if we loose our green. It will destroy the area. Along with the extra school places that are already burtsting at the seams, car parking will be a big problem, the tube will be even more rammed at rush hour time. Why can't the council do what other councils have planned for out of town garden towns maybe near Harlow where there is so much more space. Loughton and Debden will become an extension of inner London and we and many other people moved here to get away from that, and sadly people who have lived here all their lives must feel that they already have lost identity. I have my granddaughter now who I hope to still play with on the green as she grows up. It will be a total disgrace to this community if these plans go ahead.
